In some cases rice itself is used in making pearl buttons. Sugar-cane and Sugar.--There are a number of plants from whose sap sugar is made. One of these, the sugar maple, has already been mentioned (p. 132); another is the sugar beet, raised in great quantities in some of the European countries, and also, of late, in many parts of the United States. This beet is a very important source of sugar, because it can be raised in the cool temperate climate. For a long time, however, the principal source of sugar has been the sugar-cane, a plant that looks some what like corn. This plant requires a fertile soil and grows only in warm regions, where there is practically no frost even in winter. For this reason the greater part of the cane sugar comes from tropical lands, such as the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Cuba (Fig. 332). In our own country the most noted sugar district is the delta and flood plains of the lower Mississippi in Louisiana. Fio. 167. A sugar-cane field in Louisiana, with the sugar houses in the background. In that section there are large sugar plantations, some of them having several thousand acres planted in sugar-cane. Either in the fall or spring, the cane is planted in rows about six feet apart, and a crop...
