And on Broadway, three thousand miles away, the women who shopped were buying the same boxed powders, the same bottled toilet waters, the same patented soaps and brushes and candies that were to be found here. And in the immense grocery store nearby there were beautifully spacious departments worthy of any great city, devoted to rare fruits, and coffees and teas, and every pickle that ever came in a glass bottle, and every little spiced fish that ever came in a gay tin. A white-clad young man demonstrated a cake-mixer, a blue-clad young woman demonstrated jelly-powders. Nearby were the one or two big dry-goods stores, with lovely gowns in their windows, and milliners shops, with French hats in their smart Paris boxes-there was even a very tiny, very elegant little shop where pastes and powders and shampooing were the attraction; a shop that had a French name et Cie over the door. In short, there were modern women, and rich women, in Santa Paloma, as these things unmistakably indicated. Where sixty years ago there had been but a lonely outpost on a Spanish sheep-ranch, and where thirty years after that there was only a general store at a crossroads, now every luxury in the world might be had for the asking. All this part of the town lay northeast of the sleepy little Lobos River, which cut Santa Paloma in two. It was a pretty river, a boiling yellow torrent in winter, but low enough in the summer-time for the children to wade across the shallows, and shaded all along its course by overhanging maples, and willows, and oaktrees, and an undergrowth of wild currant and...
