Joseph Adegboyega-Edun is a high school counselor who is determined to help students succeed - both emotionally and academically - in the four most important and challenging years of their K-12 education. . . . While each student s post-high school plan may be different, the single most important credential needed to pursue this goal is still the high school diploma. If students consider the projection that four out of five jobs will require some form of post-secondary education, they ll see the importance of a high school education. This guide also lets parents know how to advocate for their teen s education and how to keep track of their teen s progress. . . . - September 4, 2009Succeeding in High School Reviewed By Wendy Thomas of Bookpleasures.comSucceeding in High School is a...
