Excerpt: . the apprehensive actions of the muscles of the throat. The excuse generally offered is, the strain of a long and heavy opera, fatiguing alike voice and body. If voice be properly produced, evidences of such fatigue are not perceptible in the time it takes to perform an opera. An important factor in maintaining correct pitch is an understanding of breath control. If the breath is forced through the larynx in the effort one sometimes observes in the production of a fortissimo, a resultant, deviation of pitch is not infrequent. When the throat remains as in speaking, (which is impossible if there be undue pressure of breath) there will be no tendency toward false intonation. The soft voice is the voice to build from. It is also an excellent practice to use the speaking voice in elementary voice production. The words How are you? repeated three times in an undertone until one is conscious that the throat remains passive and a strong vibration is felt by laying the hand on the chest, is found efficacious in locating pitch. The next step toward establishing tone would be to repeat the above phrase several times and then, without altering the pitch, sustain the vowel A in are for a second or so, gradually lengthening the duration as greater ease is acquired. One afflicted with tremolo or false pitch will discover that not a trace is to be found in the 60ft tone produced in this manner....
